Annette Bukovinsky

Artist Statement

My practice largely centres on investigating humanity's relationship with nature and the search for a new ecological philosophy that can address the challenges threatening the vitality of our planet.

Much of my work employs the use of clay. It is a material with a rich history and is known paradoxically for its strength and fragility. I am drawn to its malleability, tactility and even to its defiance! Clay is a material that bears witness to its own state of flux. Given that a 'state of flux' reflects my ecological observations, I believe clay has many relatable characteristics that can potentially increase the dialogue regarding the current health of our natural environments.

By utilising traditional hand-building techniques of coiling, pinching and moulding I am able to have a direct and protracted engagement with the clay enabling a more considered articulation of ideas and concepts. My interest in non-conventional surface applications, such as acrylic paint, shoe polish, bitumen and timber stains, feeds my desire to explore the nexus between tradition and innovation, and extend the link between structure, surface and concept.

Bio

Annette Bukovinsky is an artist based in Sydney, Australia. Her practice explores the intricacies of humanity's relationship with nature with the aim of searching for a new ecological philosophy that can address the challenges threatening the vitality of our planet.

Bukovinsky's sculptural ceramic forms are often paired with industrial surplus to investigate growing concerns about contemporary society's impact on biodiversity and climate change.

As a finalist in numerous art prizes since 2014, Bukovinsky's work has been exhibited in both commercial and regional galleries and has been acquired for several private collections. Upon completion of her Master of Fine Art at the National Art School Sydney in 2019, Bukovinsky has been invited to show with Stanley Street Gallery as part of their Introducing exhibition in 2020.
